

HOW I 10X'D MY DEPOSITS IN ONE MONTH

I didn't get more talented. I didn't get more famous. I stopped letting good clients slip through my fingers.

One month. Same portfolio, same prices, same city. My deposits went up 10x, because I finally admitted the problem wasn't my art. It was everything that happened after someone said "I love your work."

If you're reading this hoping for a magic sentence that makes people book, close the tab. This isn't that. This is about why you're losing people you already have, and why you keep blaming the wrong thing.

01 / STOP BLAMING THE CLIENT

"They ghosted."
"They couldn't afford it."
"They weren't serious."

Maybe. Or maybe you handed a serious client a messy, inconsistent experience and they quietly moved on to someone who felt easier to book.

Here's the uncomfortable part: you'll never know which one it was. Silence doesn't come with a reason attached. So you tell yourself the story that hurts least - it was them - and you do the exact same thing to the next person.

Being great at tattooing and being great at booking are two completely different skills. One fills your portfolio. The other fills your calendar. Nobody teaches you the second one, so you improvise it: every single time, from scratch, on top of everything else you're already doing.

That's not a talent problem.
That's a no-system problem.

02 / WHAT "NO SYSTEM" ACTUALLY COSTS YOU

You don't have a system. You have a mood, a memory, and a phone that never stops buzzing. Look at what that actually looks like:

WITHOUT A SYSTEM	WITH A SYSTEM
Every inquiry is a blank page you fill from scratch	Every inquiry drops into a process that already knows what to do
Clients get a different you depending on your day	Clients get the same confident experience every time
Leads go quiet and you have no idea why	You can see exactly where and why people fall off
"I'll get back to them" - and you don't	Nothing serious slips through the cracks
You guess whether things are getting better	You can actually tell what's working
Your booking depends on your energy	Your booking runs whether you're inspired or exhausted

Read the left column again. That's not bad luck. That's a business running on improvisation and hoping the artist has a good week.

The clients aren't the leak. The lack of a system is the leak.

03 / THE REAL SHIFT

Here's the mindset that changed everything for me, and it's the most valuable thing I can hand you for free:

Your time, your work, and your energy are the product, not just the tattoo.

The moment I started treating my booking process as something worth designing instead of something I survived, the whole business changed. I stopped chasing more inquiries. I stopped dropping my prices. I stopped taking silence personally. I built a repeatable way to move the right person from "I love your work" to "here's my deposit" - deliberately, the same way, every time.

That's the difference between an artist who hopes to get booked and an artist who is booked.

You don't need more leads. You need to stop losing the ones you have.

04 / YOUR NEXT MOVE

Now you know why. The question is whether you build the how yourself, through the same trial, error, and lost deposits I went through, or start from a system that already works.

TATASSIST: THE BOOKED ARTIST SYSTEM

The exact implementation guides and plug-in templates I used to 10x my deposits, ready to customize to your workflow and your clients.

$49 launch price. One payment, no subscription.

See the system and everything included →

Questions? syd@tatassist.com

My 10x result is my real, documented experience, not a forecast of yours. Your work, demand, pricing, and how you implement all matter. What you're buying is a practical starting system, not a guaranteed number of deposits.